BCHS's Pyle selected as 2005 Networks Scholar

Networks Financial Institute has named Andrew Pyle, a senior at Brownstown Central High School, as one of 17 members of the class of 2005 Networks Scholars. He will receive a four-year, $20,000 scholarship to Indiana State University, where he plans to major in business administration. As a Networks Scholar, he will also receive development opportunities including faculty and professional mentors, a paid internship opportunity, an international experience and a personal computer. 2005 marks the third year of this elite scholarship program available to Indiana State University incoming freshmen planning a career in the financial services industry.

According to Networks Financial Institute executive director Elizabeth Coit, (formerly Georgakopoulos), the Networks Scholars program is unique in its holistic approach to preparing financial services students for the post-college employment.

"Early career success is about more than mastering a curriculum. Networks Scholars work with professionals inside and outside of academia to gain a varied perspective on the financial services industry. The Networks Scholar experience is designed to be mutually beneficial to both students and financial services employers," Coit noted.
